Judge Deady, in his Fourth of July address in Portland, pair an elequent tribute to the efforts of Washington and Hamilton to create a nation They and the raspointes succeeded in establishing the constitution of the United States.

Jefferson was opposed to it, and wrote letters from Paris against it. But it was adopted Ten years later he attempted to undermine it. by his Kentucky and Virginia resolutions, which reasserted the old confederate principles. These resolutions were accepted by his party as the proper interpretation of the nature of the governmest. That interpretation made the national government merely "a compact between the states," and any state could dissolve the "compact whenever it might see fit. This was "lef fersoniag democracy." The natural fruit of it was the great rebellion.
